

Chief of Staff and Executive Office Leadership: Operating Rhythm, Decisions and Priorities

Chief of Staff and Executive Office Leadership: Operating Rhythm, Decisions and Priorities

Technical depth: Conceptual · Practical mode: Case study

Introduction

Top teams lose time and momentum when the executive office runs as a diary and mailroom rather than as the engine of the leadership agenda. Decisions stall between functions, priorities multiply, executive papers arrive unready and the principal becomes the bottleneck. This Core Concept course equips chiefs of staff and heads of executive offices to set the mandate, operating rhythm and decision rights that let a leadership team execute strategy. Working on case material from several sectors, participants produce an Executive Office Operating Plan for their own principal.

Course Objectives

- Define a chief-of-staff mandate and principal partnership that sets authority, boundaries and success measures
- Direct the translation of strategy into executive priorities using OKRs, the Balanced Scorecard and Hoshin Kanri
- Establish decision rights and a leadership operating rhythm that reduce escalation and meeting overload
- Judge the quality of executive papers and briefings and set a standard for decision-ready content
- Oversee risk escalation, crisis coordination and confidentiality within the executive office
- Present an Executive Office Operating Plan to a principal for adoption

Target Audience

- Chiefs of staff accountable for the agenda and effectiveness of a chief executive or top team
- Heads of executive offices leading teams that support senior leadership
- Directors of strategy management and transformation offices serving the executive committee
- Senior executive advisers accountable for briefing and decision support to the principal
- Directors of corporate affairs who coordinate board, executive and external interfaces

Why Attend This Course

- Return with an Executive Office Operating Plan for your principal, already challenged by a panel of peers
- Free the principal's time for the decisions only they can take by redesigning the flow of papers and meetings
- Hold functional leaders to agreed priorities without formal line authority over them
- Compare executive office models with chiefs of staff from other sectors and countries

Conclusion

An executive office earns its place when the leadership team decides faster, executes more consistently and is surprised less often. This course moves from defining the chief-of-staff mandate and diagnosing the current office, through the frameworks that turn strategy into priorities and decision rights, to the operating rhythm, paper standards and risk, crisis and confidentiality controls that sustain them. The final day turns that material into an Executive Office Operating Plan that participants take to their principal as the basis for how the top team will work.
